I see what you're doing, but this is a bit awkward: maybe better would be: "... their importance rise, that is doctors'."

A very needed occupation

As the current situation around the globe is becoming more and more severe, the importance of them rises. Doctors. The whole world turns its attention to them as they currently lead a real war against the new corona virus, ~~these days~~. This requires them to be very persistent as the amount of work for them rises exponentially and the end of this pandemic is nowhere near. At the same time they have to be knowledgeable and stay up-to-date with current literature, because the enemy they are facing is unknown, but reveals secrets about him each and every day. More than on other days the doctors are also expected to be stoical, rational and flexible, but not impulsive or absent-minded, as they are ~~staying~~ in the front line on the medical battlefield. Their reactions, opinions, recommendations and needs matter to all of us very much, because they are the most powerful ones who can rescue us in case ~~some~~one of us gets to know our tiny enemy way too close.

the disease?

spoken English

or "too intimately"

"him" is I believe the disease, but it is confusing like this maybe better is: "... the enemy ... but slowly reveals its secrets day by day"

just the "Be" verb.

"ones" is possible but I'll give you a better way of expressing this: "... the most powerful actors in this drama, who can rescue ..."

Nice work!: well expressed.

Comments, as always, ~~[illegible]~~ concern usage... better phrases, ways to say the same thing...
