

Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c. Amsterdam, 1618–1669

Around eighty years ago librarians in Stockholm discovered a huge cache of previously neglected early news sheets and pamphlets. Among them was a single half-sheet, undated, but judging by the contents published on 14 June 1618. This consisted of four news reports, set on one side of the sheet only. It was printed in a black letter typeface; the news reports were set in two columns on one side of a folio leaf measuring close to 30 centimetres in height and 20 centimetres in width. Above the two columns the issue read: Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c. The significance of this discovery was immediately recognised by Swedish bibliographer Folke Dahl who had been given the task of examining the newspaper horde: for this was (and still remains) the earliest surviving example of a Dutch newspaper.

The Amsterdam Courante uyt Italien is one of the most renowned Dutch newspapers of the seventeenth century. Since the discovery of the earliest issue of 14 June 1618 in Stockholm in the 1930s the Courante has held the title of the “first Dutch newspaper”.¹ For all this, it is by no means certain that the Courante was indeed the first Dutch newspaper. By February 1619 a second Amsterdam newspaper, published by Broer Jansz (1579–1652), had also appeared.² This newspaper, known from 1629 as the Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren, resembled the Courante in its design and format, likewise published with double columns on a half-sheet folio leaf. Since the survival of both newspapers is so erratic in these first years, it is impossible to say which newspaper was the first to appear; it is likely that the two did so around the same time.

The advent of the periodical press in Amsterdam was encouraged by the rapid growth of the Amsterdam book trade and the city’s commercial infrastructure. In the early seventeenth century the Dutch Republic was fast emerging as the information capital of Calvinist Europe. As tensions in the Holy Roman Empire and the Low Countries increased throughout the 1610s, Calvinist leaders and exiles looked towards the print shops and news writers of Amsterdam to supply much needed publicity for their cause. The first two newspaper publishers had both previously worked as news writers in the army of Maurice, Prince of Orange, the chief proponent of a militant foreign policy in the Dutch Republic. The two papers did much to broadcast the distressing conditions of Protestants in Bohemia and the Holy Roman Empire, building the case for intervention and renewed warfare against the Habsburgs. In this context, it seems virtually certain that both the Courante and the Tijdinghen were first published during this febrile period, sometime between 1615 and 1618.

The Courante and the Tijdinghen followed similar paths in their design, structure, and day of publication. Up to the 1630s the two titles would compete against one another in the Amsterdam news market; hereafter they were joined by several other newspapers. As competition in the news trade intensified, it became ever more obvious that the Courante enjoyed a significant advantage over its chief rival, presenting superior content and enjoying wider commercial appeal. The Courante was a source of inspiration for other newspapermen in the Dutch Republic, the Southern Netherlands and England. Until the 1650s the Courante was truly the leading newspaper of its day. The title Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c. would resonate too: the majority of seventeenth-century Dutch newspapers would style themselves as Couranten; it became, in effect, a brand name. The word Courante would become synonymous with “newspaper”. The modern Dutch word for newspaper, Krant, derives directly from Courante.

The Courante uyt Italien was published until 1669, when it was merged into the Amsterdamsche Courant.³ A total of 1,156 issues of the Courante have survived, including eleven special issues and fifty-two variants. These issues are primarily found in three overlapping collections: in Stockholm (316 issues), The Hague (460 issues), and Paris (320 issues). Stray issues and smaller runs of the newspaper have survived in close to twenty other collections. The vast majority of surviving issues date from before 1650. The survival rate of the Courante up to 1650 is 62%, whereas the survival rate is only 15% for the last two decades of production, between 1651 to 1669. The newspaper has survived in a near-complete run between 1626–1643, a remarkable feat when compared to its rivals from the same period.⁴

Until 1619 the newspaper was undated, and contained no imprint information. On 15 May 1619 the newspaper was stated to have been printed by Joris Veseler (c. 1589–1624), located at the Zuiderkerk, “inde Hoop” (in the Hope).⁵ On 28 August it was revealed that the Courante was printed by Veseler for “the courantier in the army of the Prince of Orange”, living at the bourse, across the central Dam square, in the “gecroonden Hoedt” (crowned hat).⁶ This courantier, as the imprint on 17 October 1620 exposed, was Caspar van Hilten (?–c. 1623). In all likelihood Van Hilten came from Germany, given that his son Jan was described in 1626 as “a young man from Hamburg”.⁷ After his career as a news writer in the army of Maurice, Caspar settled in Amsterdam. Setting up shop at the recently-established bourse in the later 1610s, he devoted the remainder of his career to the business of serial printed news. From at least 1620 Van Hilten published a French translation of his newspaper, the Courant d’Italie et d’Almaigne, published in the same style and format as the Courante uyt Italien.⁸ The Courant d’Italie & d’Almaigne is the first French newspaper known to have been published in Europe; the first newspaper to be published in France, the Paris Gazette, appeared over a decade later in 1631.

The Courante uyt Italien was published weekly, like most early newspapers established in the Holy Roman Empire and the Low Countries. From 1618 until at least 1624 it did not appear on a fixed day of the week. Most commonly the Courante was published on Fridays or Saturdays, but issues were also printed on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays. Only in 1624 did the date of publication settle on Saturday. At the same time Broer Jansz’s Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren settled on Saturday too, after a similarly erratic schedule of publication.

The choice to publish the Courante uyt Italien as a half-sheet folio leaf was bold. Newspapers in the Holy Roman Empire were presented in the same style as news pamphlets: usually a sheet or a half-sheet of paper folded twice to make a pamphlet of eight or four pages. The half-sheet folio style of the early Dutch newspapers was certainly more efficient in its use of paper. The pamphlet format required broader margins because of the folds, whereas the unfolded sheet of the Courante could be filled to the extremities of the margins. Pamphlet newspapers often included elaborate title-pages or woodcut illustrations, taking up further valuable space. The Courante, with its modest header and tightly-packed reports, was potentially far more economical to produce, even if the result was rather utilitarian in appearance. The Tijdinghen of Broer Jansz adopted the same format as the Courante, and from 1620 onwards both newspapers contained reports printed on both sides of the folio sheets. By the later 1620s most issues of the two newspapers contained around 1,700–2,000 words. In comparison, the folded octavo pamphlets of Abraham Verhoeven’s Antwerp Nieuwe Tijdinghen, also composed of half a sheet, contained around 800–1,000 words per issue.⁹ Throughout the seventeenth century most Dutch newspapers, especially in Amsterdam, would adopt the format pioneered by the two early Amsterdam newspapers. As the periodical press matured, and the content of Dutch newspapers expanded, the half-sheet folios became ever more tightly packed. By the end of the seventeenth century, with the help of ever smaller typefaces, Dutch newspapers would routinely accommodate around 3,500–4,000 words per issue—still using only a half-sheet of paper.

A distinct disadvantage of the half-sheet folio format was the disincentive to gather together sequential issues. Publishers of folded pamphlet newspapers, such as Abraham Verhoeven in Antwerp, encouraged their customers to collect and bind together the issues of their newspaper at the end of each year. For this purpose they often provided successive signature statements, signing issue 1 “A”, issue 2 “B”, and so forth. The majority of newspapers also adopted a sequential numbering at the top of each issue, to guide their customers and bookbinders. The smaller format of the pamphlet newspapers, together with these binding aides, have done much to preserve many early newspapers as complete runs in bound volumes. Van Hilten and Broer Jansz were less concerned with marketing their newspapers as collectables. The Courante and the Tijdinghen were unnumbered until 1629, and folio newspapers never contained signature statements. The flimsy folios were economical to produce but they were far less likely to have been preserved.

The enigmatic Caspar van Hilten died sometime between June 1622 and March 1623. From at least 13 March 1623 the Courante uyt Italien was published by Jan van Hilten (c. 1602–1655), Caspar’s son, who had taken over his father’s shop on the bourse.¹⁰ Towards the end of 1625 Van Hilten moved premises, publishing from a shop around the corner on the Beursstraat, the “twee vergulde Wapeninghen” (two gilded weapon-rings). In 1628 he changed the shop sign to the “Geborduyrde Hanschoen” (embroid-dered glove). Van Hilten would be located at the centre of the Amsterdam news market for the rest of his life. Future competitors would establish their own shops close to Van Hilten's premises. The courantiers François Lieshout and Mathijs van Meininga were located at or around the corner from the bourse; Joost Broersz was in the adjacent Pijlsteeg stretching east from the Dam square; Jan Jacobsz Bouman on "the water", (now the Damrak) the canal stretching north from the Dam square where one could find many other bookshops; and Van Hilten's closest rival, Broer Jansz, would move in 1621 to the Nieuwezijds Achterburgwal (now the Spuistraat), a minute's walk west from the Dam square.

Jan was only twenty years old when he became the new courantier, but he embraced the position with fervour and dedication. Jan would have been too young to enjoy significant experience as a field-reporter like his father or his competitor Broer Jansz, but Jan devoted his efforts to news writing and news gathering. For the first decade of his career, Van Hilten occupied himself only with the news trade. His other extant publications from the later 1620s and early 1630s are all occasional news pamphlets and illustrated broadsheets. Van Hilten worked closely with the engraver-publishers Claes Jansz Visscher (1587–1652) and Crispijn (II) van de Pas (c. 1597–1670), producing broadsheet illustrated news accounts as supplements to the weekly news reports of the Courante. It seems that Van Hilten continued to publish his father's French Courant d'Italie & d'Almaigne—at his death in 1655 the burgomasters of Amsterdam noted that Van Hilten was still publishing a French newspaper. Yet not a single copy of the Courant d'Italie & d'Almaigne or any other French newspaper published by Jan van Hilten has survived. In 1633 Van Hilten was also responsible for the publication of a series of English newsbooks.¹¹ After the suspension of serial news publication in England in October 1632, Van Hilten started to produce English newsbooks for sale in London. Three issues of this series have survived, dated from February and March 1633, but it is likely that Van Hilten continued this profitable transnational operation throughout the 1630s—London newsbooks remained banned until 1638.

The Courante uyt Italien was produced by a variety of printers. Unlike Broer Jansz, the Van Hiltens concentrated their efforts on the publication of their newspaper, rather than its printing. Joris Veseler, the first printer of the newspaper, was a Southern Netherlandish émigré who established himself by 1618 in the Amsterdam book trade as a specialist in current affairs and ephemera.¹² Veseler printed the first English newspapers for the Amsterdam publisher Pieter van den Keere, whose Corrant out of Italy and Germany &c. was based on content from both Van Hilten's and Jansz's newspapers.¹³ Veseler's experience with the printing of Van Hilten's Courante undoubtedly prompted him to print this English translation in a similar format and style. Veseler also had a penchant for more controversial works. He produced a variety of anonymous Remonstrant tracts at a time when Remonstrant printing was suppressed after the recent conclusion of the Synod of Dordt and the arrest and execution of Johan van Oldenbarnevelt.¹⁴ In January 1621 Veseler was interrogated by the authorities for the printing of two political pamphlets, the Morgen-wecker and the Historie vande gevangnisse ende executie vande gewesen Advocaet Barnevelt.¹⁵ He admitted to printing 1,000 copies of the first, a radical piece of polemic against the Prince of Orange written by Remonstrant firebrand Henricus Slatius (1585–1623); and 1,250 copies of the second, a collection of letters and prayers written by Oldenbarnevelt accompanied by an analytical narrative of his imprisonment and execution, including his final words and a letter to his family.¹⁶ Given his ready and detailed confession Veseler got off lightly with a 200 gulden fine, and publication of the Courante uyt Italien continued without interruption.

After the death of Joris Veseler in 1624 his widow Aechjen Jacobs (c. 1592-?) took over as printer of the Courante uyt Italien. In 1628 she married the young printer Jan Fredericksz Stam (c. 1602–1667), who moved in with her near the Zuiderkerk, and was from then on listed as printer of the newspaper.¹⁷ Stam, a specialist in bibles and English puritan print, was succeeded in June 1645 by his step-son Jacob Veseler (c. 1614-?), who printed the Courante until February 1646. At that point Jan van Hilten set up a press in his own shop, perhaps managed and operated there by Jacob Veseler.

In their first decade of publication the two rival Amsterdam newspapers presented their content in a similar form. The first page of their newspapers would be given up to datelined news reports. During the 1620s and early 1630s Van Hilten's news network was structured around reports from Venice, Vienna, Prague and Cologne. The German cities of Frankfurt, Breslau, Leipzig and Regensburg also appear frequently. Van Hilten maintained good connections in the Dutch army, and covered the campaigns against the Habsburgs extensively. Someway down on the second page the datelined news reports gave way to a section without datelines or headers, divided from the previous content by a distinctive line break.¹⁸ This "news below the line" was used by Van Hilten and Jansz to present to their readers a miscellany of reports derived from local and sometimes oral sources. While the reports "above the line" offered by Van Hilten and Jansz in the 1620s were often derived from the same sources, the reports "below the line" contained more significant variations.

A substantial transformation took place around the early 1630s, when the Courante uyt Italien effectively established itself as a leader in the Dutch news market. Van Hilten's news network expanded rapidly, and the overall word count of the Courante increased to close to 2,500 words per issue. Now his readers were offered regular reports from Antwerp, Hamburg, Paris, Lübeck, and Stettin. Cologne and Venice remained staples of the weekly Courante, but the centre of gravity of Van Hilten's network shifted to Northern and Western Europe. While Broer Jansz maintained a news network concentrated more on France, the Italian peninsula and Southern Germany, Van Hilten relied purely on Venice for his Southern European news. Van Hilten's network was remarkably efficient too: out of 52 issues of the Courante published in 1630, 51 issues opened with a report from Venice.

In the later 1630s Van Hilten became one of the first newspapermen to offer close coverage of the eruption and development of the English Civil Wars. Unlike his rival Broer Jansz, who relied on occasional reports from London, Van Hilten tapped into a wide network of news from English provincial towns. Almost every single issue of the Courante of the 1640s featured news from London and further reports from Plymouth, Exeter, Gloucester, York, and Newcastle, places which had scarcely featured in the Dutch newspapers up to this point. By the end of the 1640s, they had become a staple of the Dutch news industry.

From the early 1620s the Courante and the Tijdinghen provided a significant additional service for their customers: they began to print book advertisements from their colleagues in the book trade. These were always located at the end of the fourth column of news on the second page. This pioneering feature was welcomed by the Dutch book trade, albeit gradually. In the 1620s we see only a few advertisements placed in the Courante: one in 1627, four in 1628, seven in 1629. But from the early 1630s the number of advertisements increased rapidly, and by the end of the decade almost every single extant issue of the Courante featured at least one. Comparing the advertisements placed in the Courante and the Tijdinghen in the 1630s and 1640s, it becomes clear that Van Hilten's newspaper was patronised by a wider section of the book trade.¹⁹ Many booksellers who advertised regularly in the Courante never placed copy in the Tijdinghen. It is clear also that Van Hilten enjoyed national appeal: while the majority of advertisers were local Amsterdam publishers, booksellers from across the country, from Middelburg to Franeker, advertised in the Courante.

The sophistication of Van Hilten's publishing strategies are also evident from the survival of fifty-two variant issues of the Courante uyt Italien. The overlapping collections in Stockholm, The Hague and Paris reveal that Van Hilten used at least two printing presses for the production of the Courante, with two different compositors working on the paper every week. The variants also demonstrate that Van Hilten pioneered a "stop-press" publishing technique, often halting the production process of the Courante to insert late incoming reports.²⁰ More often than not, such reports came from England. The "stop-press" technique would become a common aspect of the newspaper trade throughout Europe, but Jan van Hilten was one of the first (if not the first) to experiment with this process.

Van Hilten's success in the news trade encouraged him to diversify his investments. The first extant work published by Van Hilten distinct from the news business was published in 1640, a popular description of the Dutch herring trade by Meinert Allertsz Semeyns (c. 1608–1652).²¹ Advertisements placed by Van Hilten in his newspaper reveal that he was already diversifying his publications in the early 1630s: on 17 September 1633 he advertised for an English bible. This bible is no longer extant, so the advertisement constitutes the only record of its existence.²² By the 1640s Van Hilten was publishing a variety of histories, plays, literature, and works of architecture, medicine, jurisprudence and mathematics. mid-1640s Van Hilten also published a second newspaper, the Extraordinaire Advijzen op Donderdagh, a Thursday weekly to complement his established Saturday venture.²³ By this point the Amsterdam news market was expanding to its greatest heights, and Van Hilten was determined not to fall behind.

Newspaper men always had to keep a wary eye that the contents of their papers would not cause offence, and here the Courante uyt Italien was also an unwilling pioneer, being the first Dutch newspaper to receive recorded reprimands for its contents. The States General complained to the magistrates of Amsterdam after Van Hilten had published a report in his Courante on 1 July 1645 which stated that the Duke of Orleans had asked Stadhouder Frederick Henry for greater assistance against Spain.²⁴ The States General took affront at this report, given that they intended to deploy the Stadhouder's new troops in the Sound, rather than in the Habsburg Netherlands. A second complaint made against the Courante was to follow in 1658, this time by George Downing, the ambassador of the English Commonwealth. Downing was aghast that an issue of the Courante, dated 28 December 1658, had included a report from London which claimed that Commonwealth militias had dug up the recently buried remains of Lord Protector Oliver Cromwell in pursuit of their demand for unpaid salaries.²⁵ On both occasions the magistrates of Amsterdam, who received the complaints, paid little attention to the protests.

A more serious disruption to the Courante uyt Italien came in 1654. In this year the burgomasters of Amsterdam decided to regulate the production of newspapers in the city.²⁶ They instructed the four remaining courantiers (two publishing on Tuesdays, and two, including Van Hilten, on Saturdays) to share publication.²⁷ Henceforth, instead of competing on the same day, the four newspapers would appear fortnightly in alternating weeks. Thus the Courante uyt Italien shared Saturdays with its former rival the Tijdinghen; the two serials also shared the annual numbering sequence. One year all the issues of the Courante took the even numbers, and all the issues of the Tijdinghen the odd. The lively competition between the two newspapers had come to a sudden and innocuous end.

Jan van Hilten died in November 1655, when the ownership of his newspaper was thrown into dispute. Van Hilten's wife had died in 1639, and his two eldest children had passed away in 1628 and 1640. Van Hilten had not remarried, and was supported only by his sole surviving child, Celia. She had married the young bookseller Nicolaes Jacobsz (c. 1631-?) on 3 September 1655, two months before Jan van Hilten's death.²⁸ Jacobsz and Celia wished to take over the Courante uyt Italien together with the rest of Van Hilten's business, but the burgomasters of Amsterdam had other plans. On 10 December they appointed the printer and bookseller Otto Barentsz Smient (1614–1689) as the new publisher of the Courante uyt Italien.²⁹ Smient, son of publisher Barent Otsz, came from an established family of printers and booksellers active in Amsterdam and Dordrecht.³⁰ He was an experienced publisher and a member of the St Luke's guild of Amsterdam since 1635. Smient was located on the Reguliersbreestraat, a little further south from the heart of the Amsterdam book trade. Up to 1655 he had occupied himself largely with a trade in bibles, history and literature, mostly published in smaller formats, catering for the large market for middling vernacular literature and devotional print in the Dutch Republic. After he was appointed, Smient concentrated more on his work as courantier, and his productivity beyond the news market diminished. On Mondays he also published a weekly French newspaper, as Jan van Hilten had done: the Nouvelles Ordinaires (from 1666 known as the Gazette Ordinaire d'Amsterdam).³¹

Smient's experience and reputation are likely to have undermined young Jacobsz's chances of selection for the position of courantier. Yet Jacobsz did not relinquish easily what he regarded as his familial right as son-in-law of Jan van Hilten. Within weeks of Smient's appointment, Jacobsz had moved to the nearby town of Weesp, where he promptly established a print shop and published a rival newspaper.³² This, the Weesp Courante uyt Italien ende Duytschlant, &c. (1656–1660), would haunt Smient for at least four years. Jacobsz published his rival Courante every Saturday, transporting copies to Amsterdam using the recently opened canal between Amsterdam and Weesp.

Smient had no means to silence Jacobsz, who had been welcomed by the local authorities in Weesp, and he could do little to prevent the Weesp Courante infringing on his market and stealing his customers. Jacobsz presented his Courante in a near-identical form as Smient; the only notable difference was the assertion by Smient in the imprint that he was the “authorised courantier” of Amsterdam. For his part Jacobsz emphasised in the imprint of his newspaper that he was the “son-in-law of the late Jan van Hilten”. Jacobsz published the Weesp Courante till at least September 1660. It is uncertain how badly Smient’s sales were affected by the rivalry, but the impact must have been considerable. The Weesp Courante, despite its outsider status, was quickly used by several Amsterdam booksellers for their book advertisements—an indication that they may have preferred Jacobsz to Smient as the successor of Van Hilten.

Smient’s news network was remarkably different from that of the late Jan van Hilten. Smient cultivated a network of correspondents concentrated on the Mediterranean, Paris, London and the Baltic. There were few German reports to be found in Smient’s Courante, but instead frequent dispatches from Madrid, the North African coast, Naples, Lisbon and Genoa; locations which had rarely appeared during Van Hilten’s period as publisher. Smient regularly offered two reports from Paris, and often three from London. The overall content of the newspaper increased under Smient’s tenure: Smient introduced smaller roman and cursive typefaces, and by the end of the 1660s most issues of the Courante contained around 3,000 words. From the early 1660s the newspaper also featured geographical headers, grouping reports under different sections (a fashion introduced in The Hague by Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht and in Haarlem by Abraham Casteleyn). In 1662 Smient also added a small woodcut of the coat of arms of Amsterdam, positioned at the top-left corner alongside the title. He was the first Amsterdam courantier to do so.

During his time as publisher of the Courante uyt Italien Smient ran into conflict with the bookseller Cornelis Jansz Swoll (c. 1622–1687), who had published a French newspaper, La Gazette d’Amsterdam, on Thursdays from 1662 onwards.³³ In 1670 Swoll began to publish his newspaper twice a week, on Tuesdays and Thursdays. This expansion had come too soon, and according to testimony from both Smient and Swoll the market for French newspapers had become saturated. In 1673 the burgomasters of Amsterdam resolved that the two men would share publication, restricting Swoll to Thursdays only. However, shortly afterwards the competitors came to an agreement: Smient would stop publishing his Gazette Ordinaire for an annual fee of 200 gulden paid to him by Swoll, allowing Swoll to continue La Gazette d’Amsterdam as a bi-weekly publication. In return Smient also promised to divert his correspondents’ letters to Swoll.

Smient remained in the position of courantier when the Courante uyt Italien was merged at the start of 1670 into the Amsterdamsche Courant, appearing every fortnight on Saturday under the title of the Amsterdamse Saturdaghse Courant.³⁴

NB.

Because of the irregular date of publication of the Courante uyt Italien during the first decade of printing and lack of numbering I have not inferred any issues up to 1629.

On 10 July 1627 Jan van Hilten published an issue of his newspaper using the form of title employed by Broer Jansz for his Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren: “Wt Breslauen 17. Iunij.” I cannot establish why Van Hilten would have chosen to do so, or whether this was a printing mistake by Aechjen Jacobs, the printer.

The title of the Courante uyt Italien was subject to frequent minor changes. It was variably titled: Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c. (1618–1623), Courante uyt Italien en Duytschlandt, &c. (1623–1625), Courante uyt Italien en Duytsch-landt, &c. (1625–1628), Courante uyt Italien ende Duytschlandt, &c. (1628–1631, 1632–1647), Courante uyt Italien ende Duytschlandt &c. (1631–1632), Courante uyt Italien ende Duytschlant, &c. (1648–1656), Courante uyt Italien ende Duytslant, &c. (1657–1662), Courante uyt Italien ende Duytslant &c. (1662), Courante uyt Italien en Duytslant, &c. (1663–1664), Courante uyt Italien en Duytslant (1665–1669), Courante uyt Italien en Duytslant &c. (1669).
