POZOR:
It may help you to remember the prepositions of direction and location as acronyms.
z, do, v = zdrov
z, na, na = znana
od, k, u = odku

We usually use the prepositions z – do – v in connection with a closed or limited space, e.g. with continents, most countries, towns, villages, shops and buildings.

We usually use the prepositions z – na – na in connection with an open or unlimited space and with surfaces, but also for events and activities, certain public institutions, islands and peninsulas (for a more detailed list of na-words, see p. 69).

We usually use the prepositions od – k – u when we want to express a direction from one place or object to another (od – k), or when we are outside a place or object (u). That is why it's natural to use these prepositions with people as well.

The prepositions nad, pod, před, za and mezi are used:

- a) with the accusative after verbs expressing the direction of a motion, e.g. Dám obraz nad stůl. I'll put the picture on the table.
- b) with the instrumental after verbs expressing location, e.g. Obraz je na stolem. The picture is above the table.

The preposition po expresses both location and motion around this location, e.g.: Chodím po náměstí. I am walking around the square. Cestuju po Evropě. I am travelling around Europe.

The prepositions z, v, k, od, nad, pod and před also have a longer form for easier pronunciation ze, ve, ke, ode, nade, pode and přede.
