Public, group and private interests – conflicts

What kind of value contexts might an elected representative (Member of Parliament) operate in?

- Own conscience (internalized values)
- Public interests, e.g. as articulated in general programmatic documents (government policy statement, election programmes of political parties)
- Group interests (lobbying, corruption)
- Benefiting one's own political party and/or harming others
- Private self-interest

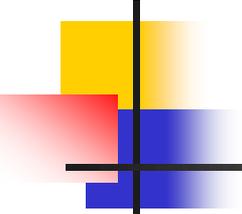

Public interests...

"Living adults share, we must believe, the same public interest. For them, however, the public interest is mixed with, and is often at odds with, their private and special interests. Put this way, we can say, I suggest, that the public interest may be presumed to be what men would choose if they saw clearly, thought rationally, acted disinterestedly and benevolently."

(Walter Lippman, Essays in the Public Interest Philosophy. Boston, Little, Brown and Co. 1955, p. 42).

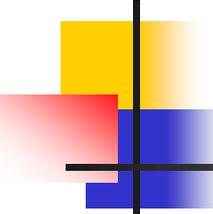

Public interests: context and related terms

- In every society, competing value orientations and visions are reflected in the different value backgrounds of different public policies.

Example: debates about the form of government budgets (always achieve a balanced budget v. support science and education at the expense of a budget deficit)

- Common good (social teaching of the Catholic Church)
- Public good (Martenas 1991)
- Supraindividual interest (Ochrana 1999)
- General interest (EU Lisbon Treaty)

Characterising public interests

- they pertain to the quality of life of a given society's members, or other values they find important;
- they can be related to the quality or the effects of functioning of society as a whole;
- they are embedded historically, in a given stage of civilization development, and may change;
- they enter an arena where they clash with differentiated individual, group and institutional interests and come to be identified, articulated, acknowledged and fulfilled. Decisions adopted affect the ways public goods are made, distributed and used; the quality of life of large social groups; and the satisfaction of the functional needs of society as a whole;
- they are related to current social problems or possible futures (reactive v. active public policy, e.g. applying the concept of sustainable development);
- their fulfilment often goes beyond the competences of a single institution or an entire department of government.

Critical Thinking Question

- Are the various efforts to regulate the Internet in the public interest?**

What is public policy? Theory...

Public policy (sometimes also policy studies or policy science) is defined as a discipline which elaborates and applies the interpretative frameworks of sociology, economics, political sciences, law, management theory, and other disciplines in analysing and forecasting the processes of formation and assertion of public interests with respect to solving differentiated social problems. It primarily deals with the institutional mediation of those processes by the public sector, the civic sector and, to some extent, also the private sector, in a form that is useful for political practice. (Potůček at al., 2016)

... and practice:

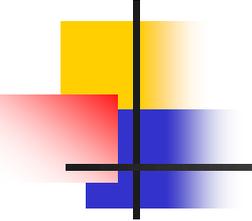

The mission of public policies can be understood as an effort to fulfil public interests by solving social problems.

For example, family policy responds to social problems caused by the occurrence of family dysfunction or breakdown where society defines good family functioning as public interest.

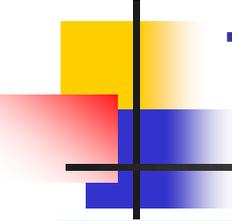

Important distinctions of public policy as social practice (on the case of family policy):

- Active versus reactive (family planning advice versus v. foster/residential care)
- By regulatory principles or instruments applied (family law, child benefits, preschool establishments, parenting education)
- Global/EU/national/local (family policy is mostly implemented at the national level, sometimes at the regional or municipal level)
- By actors involved (departments, civic sector service providers, churches, schools, police, courts, family members)
- By target group (future families, families with dependent children, families with handicapped members, lone-parent families)

Distinguishing public policies

- Liberal public policies intervene only as far as a recognized public interest is jeopardized by the pursuit of individual/group interests.
- Paternalist public policies pursue a recognized public interest irrespective of the changing nature of social problems or harm to individual interests.

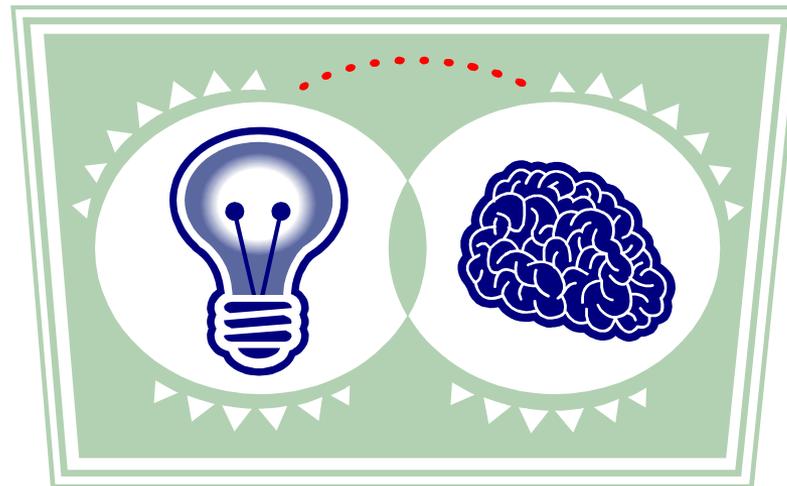

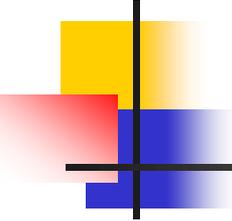

Transdisciplinarity of public policy

	Example topics
Sociology	Understanding society as a whole, social structure in terms of classes and other groups, social status, social problems, social interests, social exclusion
Economics	Instrumental rationality, institutional economics, behavioral economics, cost-benefit analysis, political economy, monetary policy, fiscal policy
Political science	Political processes, institutions and actors
Public administration	The role of bureaucracy in shaping policies and implementing decisions
Legal sciences	Law as a normative and regulatory framework
Management theory	Processes of decision making, implementation and evaluation
