

Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren Amsterdam, 1619–1671

Broer Jansz (1579–1652) was one of the most prolific newsmen of the seventeenth century.<sup>1</sup> He was a true pioneer, an entrepreneur who stood at the centre of a burgeoning commercial market for printed news. His long career spanned most of the Eighty Years' War—he would see the Dutch state rise from its humble beginnings as a struggling rebel remnant to the first rank of Europe's commercial powers. Jansz's life would follow a similar path: he worked his way steadily through the book trade as a journeyman, engraver, compositor, printer and publisher. At the end of his life, aged seventy-three, Jansz had stamped his legacy on the Dutch news market, and was the proud head of a family of courantiers: his son, son-in-law and grandson would follow him into the newspaper business.<sup>2</sup>

It is uncertain when Broer Jansz first became a newspaper publisher. While the honour of “first courantier” in the Low Countries is currently awarded to Caspar van Hilten (?–c. 1623), whose Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c. survives from June 1618 onwards, it is highly likely that Jansz started his newspaper around the same time, if not a few years earlier.<sup>3</sup> The earliest surviving issue of Jansz's newspaper, then untitled, dates from 10 February 1619.<sup>4</sup> From 1629 the newspaper would be known as the Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren. Prior to this date the issues were headed by the dateline of the first news report, usually from Rome or Venice: “Wt Romen den 18. Mey” or “Wt Venetien den 6. Februarij, 1621”. Jansz's Tijdinghen was published as a half-sheet folio, from 1620 onwards always printed on both sides—exactly the same style as Van Hilten's Courante uyt Italien. The news reports were set in double columns in a black letter typeface. The issues were unnumbered until 1629.

In the early 1600s Broer Jansz was like his competitor Van Hilten a field-reporter and news writer in the army of Stadhouder Maurice, son of Prince William of Orange. Jansz's newspapers always stated proudly that they were printed by Broer Jansz, “former courantier in the army of His Princely Excellency”. Jansz started his career as an apprentice and compositor in the print shop of Willem Jansz van Veen (fl. 1577–1604), an Amsterdam publisher specialising in news pamphlets and current affairs.<sup>5</sup> Van Veen had good connections with the Dutch army; perhaps he helped Broer Jansz launch his career as a news writer. By 1603 Jansz had opened his own print shop in Amsterdam, producing a variety of news pamphlets documenting the progress of the army of Maurice against Spanish forces. Not content with receiving reports from the front-line, Jansz spent most of the summer of 1604 accompanying the Prince's army; upon his return to Amsterdam he wrote, printed and published an account of the campaign, entitled Journael ofte dach-register van't principaelste in Vlaenderen geschiet, sedert den 25. april tot den 15. september 1604.<sup>6</sup> Jansz would retain a penchant for eyewitness accounts. One of the earliest extant issues of the Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren is a special issue describing the execution of Johan van Oldenbarnevelt, former Grand Pensionary of Holland, on 13 May 1619.<sup>7</sup> Jansz had travelled down from Amsterdam to attend the execution in The Hague, and he most likely printed his account the following day. He promised his readers that he would notify them of further details in his newspaper the coming Friday.

In the early 1600s Jansz's business prospered in the burgeoning Amsterdam book world. While the news trade would always demand his greatest attention, he was soon diversifying, printing almanacs, song books, plays, devotional literature, travel books, wedding poems and ordinances. He had become a specialist of cheap print, acquir-

Broer Jansz issued at least two editions. See also the variant: *Verhael vanden doot des Advocaets van Hollandt, Johan van Olden-Barnevelt, hoe hy op den 13. ing a reputation for quality ephemera. Jansz worked for numerous publishers in Amsterdam, printing for Hendrick Barentsz, Jacob Pietersz Wachter, Claes Jansz Visscher, Jan Evertsz Cloppenburgh, Hendrick Laurensz, Pieter Walschaert, Cornelis Lodewijcksz vander Plasse, Michiel Colijn, Abraham de Wees, Theunis Jacobsz Lootsman, Jan Jacobsz Schipper, Jan Bruyningh, Gerrit Jansz, Jacob Lescaille and Jan Marcusz. He also worked occasionally for publishers further afield, including Hillebrant Jacobsz (I) van Wouw (in The Hague), Vincent (I) Casteleyn (in Haarlem) and Zacharias Heyns (in Zwolle). Jansz's expertise was recognised by the local authorities, and he was appointed as stadsdrukker by the magistrates in 1614, and later as printer of disputations for the Athenaeum Illustre (the illustrious school, founded in 1632).<sup>8</sup> That a printer of everyday vernacular print could be considered for such positions in the greatest city of the Dutch Republic suggests that the market in Dutch books was recognised for what it was: the cornerstone of the publishing industry. Overall, Jansz produced at least 450 publications throughout his career—many more are undoubtedly lost.

By the later 1610s Jansz was exceptionally well-equipped to publish a newspaper. He enjoyed connections in the army; he was well regarded by the local authorities; he could rely on a wide network of booksellers and publishers who would distribute his publications; and he had a true nose for valuable news reports. Broer Jansz moved ever closer to the centre of the Amsterdam book trade during the 1610s. He moved shop frequently, occupying no fewer than five premises up to 1615, most of which were located in the cramped north-western neighbourhood of Amsterdam. Between 1615 and 1619 he was located on the Nieuwezijdsdolk; in 1619 he moved to the Sint Nicolaasstraat, next to the “vergulden Os” (gilded ox), before settling in May 1621 on the Nieuwezijds Achterburgwal (now the Spuistraat), in the “Silvere Can” (silver jug). With these three relocations, steadily occupying shops in grander streets, Jansz had established himself securely at the heart of the Amsterdam news trade. He would remain in his shop on the Nieuwezijds Achterburgwal, a stone's throw behind the city hall, for the rest of his career.

The Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren appeared once a week, initially on Fridays or Saturdays, but throughout 1619–1621 also sometimes on Mondays, Tuesdays or Wednesdays. From the end of 1624 the newspaper was commonly published on Saturdays, with fewer irregularities. From 1654 onwards the Tijdinghen appeared fortnightly, after the burgomasters of Amsterdam introduced a stringent regulation concerning the production of newspapers. Henceforth the newspaper shared publication with the Courante uyt Italien, also adopting a shared numbering system throughout the year.

Early in his newspaper career Jansz also offered English and French translations of his Tijdinghen. In 1621 he was responsible for a weekly English Corante, or, newes from Italy and Germanie, drawn together largely from reports published in the Tijdinghen.<sup>9</sup> It is likely that this series was short-lived, halted by the publication in London of Nathaniel Bourne and Nathaniel Butter's series of newsbooks in the early 1620s, which brought to an end not only Broer Jansz's English newspaper, but also a parallel venture by the Amsterdam bookseller Pieter van den Keere. Notwithstanding the brevity of their English series (no issues survive after 1621), Broer Jansz can be named, alongside Pieter van den Keere, as the first publishers of English newspapers. From at least 1635 Broer Jansz was also responsible for a weekly French newspaper, the Nouvelles de divers Quartiers.<sup>10</sup> The Nouvelles appeared on Mondays, and contained virtually the same news reports as printed in the Tijdinghen on Saturdays. Only advertisements placed by booksellers in the Tijdinghen were left out of the Nouvelles. With this French venture Jansz seems to have targeted partly French readers at home, but also the French market in the Southern Netherlands and France, in a similar fashion to later Huguenot courantiers in the Dutch Republic.

A total of 650 issues of the Tijdinghen have survived (including seven variants and four special issues). The survival rate of the newspaper, at 28%, is much poorer than its rival Courante uyt Italien (with a 50% survival rate), but the Tijdinghen survive largely in the same collections as the Courante. Most issues can be found in Stockholm (328 issues), Paris (129 issues), and The Hague (61 issues), with stray issues in over twenty smaller collections. The fact that the Tijdinghen has often been preserved in the same places as issues of the Courante suggests that the two newspapers were often read alongside one another. The statesman-poet Pieter Cornelisz Hooft commented in a letter to his brother-in-law Joost Baak on 25 August 1631 that “yesterday my brother-in-law Bartelot sent me the tidings of Veseler [the printer of the Courante], which are more agreeable than those of Broer [Jansz], which came from you".<sup>11</sup>

Hooft enjoyed comparing the two newspapers for the variety of their content. Broer Jansz did have a remarkably different network of correspondents than his closest rivals Caspar and Jan van Hilten. Whereas the Van Hiltens concentrated their efforts on a North European network of news sources, Jansz's Tijdinghen offered a selection of reports drawn largely from Southern and Central European news centres. Rome, Venice, Vienna, Prague, Switzerland, Strasbourg and Paris were staples in the Tijdinghen on a regular basis. Jansz cultivated a more extensive network of correspondents in Italy, France and the Holy Roman Empire than the Van Hiltens, but he fell behind in the 1640s when news from the English Civil Wars came to dominate public attention in the Dutch Republic. Jansz did continue to maintain good connections with the Dutch army, and his coverage of the campaigns and sieges of Stadhouders Frederick Henry was always comprehensive.

Broer Jansz was identified by contemporaries as the most partisan voice of the Dutch news trade. He was frequently singled out for criticism from the Southern Netherlands, generally bearing the brunt of mockery by fellow newsman Abraham Verhoeven in Antwerp. In 1626 Verhoeven ridiculed Broer Jansz for printing false news of the victory of the King of Denmark against the Imperial army. Verhoeven, impersonating the Amsterdam courantier, lamented that "my press and type were already prepared, to print the victory of the Dane".<sup>12</sup> An anonymous Southern pamphlet from 1638, Den Ghefaillerden Facit, contained a boisterous attack against Broer Jansz's reputation as courantier, mocking Jansz for preferring to print old news of bygone Dutch victories rather than report the latest news of Dutch defeat at the battle of Kallo.<sup>13</sup> Recent scholarly studies largely reiterate seventeenth-century portrayals of Jansz as a "militant Orangist and Calvinist", struggling at times to restrain himself to sober news reporting.<sup>14</sup>

Jansz certainly came from a different milieu than his chief rival Jan van Hilten (c. 1602–1655). Jan, who had taken over the Courante uyt Italien after his father's death around 1623, was more than twenty years younger than Broer Jansz. Unlike Jansz, who had worked his way up through the book trade, Jan van Hilten was a newspaper publisher by the time he was twenty, devoting himself exclusively to news writing and publishing. Jansz, who had grown up during the volatile years of the Twelve Years' Truce and experienced the terrors of war first hand, undoubtedly perceived the world through different eyes.

It does seem that Van Hilten's Courante was more popular with fellow booksellers in the Dutch trade than Jansz's Tijdinghen. From the early 1620s booksellers had started to place notifications for forthcoming publications in the two Amsterdam newspapers. The first recorded advertisement was placed in Jansz's Tijdinghen on 1 March 1621.<sup>15</sup> By the later 1630s the majority of issues of the two Amsterdam weeklies contained one or two booksellers' advertisements. Van Hilten's Courante enjoyed wider patronage from advertising booksellers, many of whom do not have seemed to have advertised in the Tijdinghen.<sup>16</sup>

In 1629 Jansz was in financial trouble, and asked the burgomasters of Amsterdam for permission to auction off some of his stock to restore liquidity.<sup>17</sup> Permission for this auction was granted, though no catalogue of the auction has survived (if one was produced). Afterwards his business seems to have flourished, and he continued to enjoy a prominent position in the Dutch book trade. In 1640 Jansz started a bi-annual book trade catalogue, the Catalogus Universalis, a register of all recently published titles in the Dutch Republic.<sup>18</sup> Booksellers were invited to send Jansz lists of their new titles, which they seem to have done with enthusiasm—while the Catalogus Universalis never came close to including details of every book published in the Dutch Republic, it was supported by a majority of publishers throughout the country, and approximately a quarter of books published throughout the 1640s would feature in the catalogue.<sup>19</sup> Jansz would maintain this venture until his death in October 1652.

18 Jansz, Catalogus Universalis.

19 The fifteen extant issues of the Catalogus Universalis contain together just over 2,000 titles. The USTC currently documents over 9,500 titles published in the Dutch Republic in the 1640s (essentially the decade covered by the catalogues), a figure which includes many genres of books never featured in the Catalogus Universalis, such as academic disputations and ordinances.

Broer Jansz was buried in the Nieuwe Kerk on 21 October 1652. He had clearly been in failing health, because the Amsterdam burgomasters had already appointed Jan Banningh as the new stadsdrukker on 17 October. The Tijdinghen was continued by Jansz's son-in-law, Jan Jacobsz Bouman (?–1671), who had married Jansz's daughter Aeltje in 1640.<sup>20</sup> Bouman, who maintained a shop on “the water” (the modern Damrak), had substantial experience in the newspaper trade as the printer and publisher of the bi-weekly Extra Europische tijdingen uyt verscheyde Quartieren, which appeared in the mid-1640s.<sup>21</sup> It is likely that this venture had been published with the assistance of Broer Jansz; now Bouman came to the rescue of the Jansz family. Broer Jansz's widow, Lijsbeth Philips (c. 1592–1672), declared to the Amsterdam burgomasters in January 1653 that she had no wish to continue the newspaper.<sup>22</sup> Instead, she wished to pass on the position to Bouman, who would bear the costs and enjoy the profits of the venture. The widow asked only that she would be granted by Bouman 200 gulden a year as a pension, and that he would also grant another 200 gulden each year to the heirs of Broer Jansz. It is unclear who these heirs were, but the fact that Bouman consented to his proposal indicates that the profits from the Tijdinghen (by the 1650s) were substantial enough to provide an annual 400 gulden subsidy to the Jansz family. As tribute to the widow of Broer Jansz, Bouman maintained her name on the newspaper rather than his own. Only in 1670, shortly before his death, did Bouman reveal himself to be the de facto proprietor of the venture.

Bouman published the Tijdinghen until his death in January 1671, when the newspaper was merged into the conglomerated Amsterdamsche Courant and Bouman's position as courantier was taken over by Casparus Commelijn (1636–1693).<sup>23</sup> The character of the Tijdinghen had changed noticeably during Bouman's tenure as courantier in the 1650s and 1660s. Bouman maintained a different network of correspondents, and the focus of the newspaper shifted from Jansz's German, Italian and French network to Northern Europe, similar to Jan van Hilten's network of correspondence. In the 1650s and 1660s Bouman presented in the Tijdinghen regular reports from Stockholm, Copenhagen, Danzig, Hamburg, London, Paris, Antwerp, and Brussels; but he also enjoyed good connections with the Iberian Peninsula, offering regular dispatches from Lisbon, Cádiz and Madrid. Meanwhile Italian reports in the Tijdinghen dwindled to a minimum.

Bouman also introduced a new range of typefaces, making more frequent use of a small roman typeface for a variety of news reports. He ensured that the Tijdinghen kept up with developments in the Dutch newspaper trade; the Courante uyt Italien and the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante underwent similar transformations, while the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant had become the new trendsetter in the newspaper market.<sup>24</sup> By Bouman's death Dutch readers were offered an extensive range of reports, increasingly smaller typefaces, and a growing range of advertisements. The courantiers of the final decades of the seventeenth century would be wealthy, established gentlemen, decorous in their appearance. They paid less attention to the printing of their newspapers, which was tasked to their assistants or business partners. By 1700 Broer Jansz, the more humble journalist-printer, would not have fitted in. Yet the grand gentlemen at the end of the century relied more than they might have acknowledged on the imaginative and innovative spirit of Broer Jansz for the newspaper trade in which they made their profits.

NB.

Because of the irregular date of publication of the Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren during the first decade of printing and lack of numbering I have not inferred any issues up to 1629.

The spelling of the title of the Tijdinghen was subject to frequent minor changes. Tijdinghen, Tijdingen, Tijdinge, Tijdinghe, Tydingen, Tydinghe, and Tydinge were all used; verscheyde or verscheyden (and in 1630 briefly vele) were also used.
