

CAE / #1

Tomáš Rabas - iSuit

spent in doing sth
so: "spent in preparing you..."

Imagine a cold autumn evening. It's heavily raining with a strong wind. All your clothes are wet, and your hair flies everywhere. One hour spent by preparations of your outfit is gone. Your boyfriend is waiting to join you because today is your anniversary. In a minute you will enter an old hall with golden walls and red carpets. You look at your watch, push a button, and you will turn into a charming beautiful princess in the most magical dress you have ever dreamed about.

Does it sound good? With a new special suit and an application from Apple, this can be a reality for you. It's made of special carbon-based material, formerly invented by the military of the USA. It was used by special undercover units for secret operations. It reflects light and changes its color, based on a digital signal transmitted from close CPU, so it can get any shape, which you can think about. Now, this privilege can belong to you, ordinary men or women, as well.

Tim Cook, chief executive officer of Apple Inc., has announced during a conference last week, that product called iSuit will be at markets at the beginning of next summer. As he said: "if you had a feeling that you are missing something in your life, this is it". We can just wait if it will fulfill our full expectations, but it is something that will make up some fuss.

"make some fuss"
can work

but "make up" The idiom
has many uses, but doesn't work here.

- good intro.

- good body

nice development -

language comments: above

Thanks, -

good.